A Message from the Secretary of the Interior

The landing of Columbus and his men in the New World ushered in 500 years of events unparalleled in history. It led to the emigration of millions of people, and the development of our Nation. The legacy of that voyage is modern America, unique among the nations of the world.

An Italian captain and Spanish crew, forever connecting the New World with the Old World, set the foundation for this diversity. Over the next 500 years countless voyages followed--by those seeking adventure, religious and political freedom, and a better life for themselves and their families. Whether our ancestors crossed that long lost land-bridge connecting America with Asia, sailed on the Mayflower, or immigrated through Ellis Island or some other port of entry, all have contributed to the historic and cultural heritage of America. Even those who are new to America's shore are adding to the national experience.

This is a time for all Americans to rejoice in the diversity of our Nation. For all that has transpired over the past 500 years, let us never lose sight of the fact that America represents the best hopes of mankind--freedom and opportunity. Let that be the legacy of Christopher Columbus, and the crews of the Nina, Pinta, and Santa Maria.

Manuel Lujan
Secretary of the Interior

A Message from the Director of the National Park Service

The National Park Service and the Department of the Interior are pleased to participate in the international observance of the Columbus Quincentennial. This significant anniversary challenges us to lift our focus beyond the traditional concentration on Christopher Columbus, the man, to the resulting encounter between the Old and New Worlds. The projects listed in this directory strive to illuminate the cultural, social, and economic exchanges flowing from this encounter, which continues to resonate through the multicultural fabric of our nation.

Thirty-nine units of the National Park Service have been designated Columbus Quincentennial Parks because of their association with the broad theme: The Continuing Encounter. While most of the projects listed on the following pages were developed by these 39 parks, several were developed by other parks, our regional offices, and cooperating associations. Many of these projects were developed in collaboration with neighboring communities. All seek to utilize the physical resources, intangible cultural associations, and interpretive programs of the parks to enhance public understanding of Hispanic, Native American, and other ethnic group contributions to American history and culture. We hope these projects will help educators take advantage of park resources and interpretive materials. We are also pleased to include many of the fine Quincentennial projects developed by our colleagues in other Interior Department bureaus.

Addresses and telephone numbers are provided for each listing to allow visitors to confirm dates or request additional information on any of the projects.
